

Pre-Conference Briefing White Certificates & Suppliers' Obligations Monday June 11, 2012

Suppliers' obligations have been implemented with success by some European countries. In June 2011 a new proposal for a Directive on energy efficiency was published. This draft legislative proposal mandates all Member States to establish their own energy savings obligation schemes whereby energy suppliers will be obliged to deliver yearly savings through implementing energy efficiency measures among final customers.

The text of the proposal provides a general common framework for the design features of obligation schemes including the unit of measures and calculation methods to be used for the energy savings claimed by obliged parties.

The workshop will present principles and features of existing suppliers' obligations and the analysis behind it. The seminar will further present the latest results of the national suppliers' obligations in Europe, including new schemes being announced as result of the proposed Directive.

Briefing will address:

The fundamental principle of white certificates

- The functioning principle of white certificates
- How to design a white certificate scheme (obliged parties, sector covered, M&V, cost-recovery)
- How to design the M&V system
- Organisational issues
- Interaction with other policy instruments
